Project Description

This research project will test a technology-based health behavior intervention with teens residing in domestic violence shelters. Teens exposed to parental intimate partner violence are more likely to engage in risky health behaviors. This study will examine whether it is feasible to deliver the intervention at domestic violence shelters and whether teens will engage in the intervention. The WISE student may be assigned to various aspects of this research, including but not limited to organization and analysis of quantitative survey data, coding and analysis of qualitative interview data, and development of presentations and/or manuscripts.
